- 1.) At the beginning of the story, Rainsford doesn't seem to care how the animals being hunted feel. He tells Whitney, "Who cares how a jaguar feels" (Connell 54). He later changes his mindset about hunting when he sees what it feels like to be the prey.
- 2.) Zaroff explains to Rainsford that he began hunting human game because hunting other game had become boring. He always got his prey so it was no longer a challenge. He had killed all different types of animals, and none of them were presenting a true challenge for him. He was missing the "danger" he once felt when hunting big game.
- 3.) Rainsford escapes Zaroff in the hunt, and swims back to the palace to confront Zaroff. Zaroff congratulates Rainsford for winning the game, but Rainsford says he's still a "beast at bay," and challenges Zaroff to finish the fight (74). Rainsford apparently kills Zaroff because Rainsford is the person who gets to sleep in the comfortable bed.
- 4.) Rainsford confronts Zaroff because he wants the satisfaction of getting revenge. Rainsford really wanted Zaroff to know that Rainsford won the game. Rainsford also wants the fight to be fair, since he now knows how it feels to be the hunted.
